Now officials are taking a $200 million step to change that On Thursday, after years of debate and development, California officials commemorated the beginning of construction on a “suicide deterrent” net that will span both sides of the Golden Gate Bridge.

If a person jumped onto the net, it would be unforgiving, Clemens says, perhaps leading to broken bones.. One survivor said the beauty of the “readily available” bridge attracted them.. The promise that the method would be effective brought them, too Because the site situated roughly 220 feet above the water was already so famous for suicides, that reputation apparently became self-perpetuating.

Suicide prevention advocates have propelled it When the project is completed, the stainless steel mesh net will be located about 20 feet below the bridge and stretch 20 feet out from its edges, running the length of seven football fields.. For decades it has been the “number one location” for suicide attempts, with nearly 40 known people jumping to their deaths in 2016 and about 200 more being talked away from its ledges.. “The Golden Gate Bridge is a source of immense pride to San Francisco But for too many families in our community, it has also been a place of pain,” Pelosi, who represents the San Francisco area in Congress, told TIME in a statement on Wednesday.. Researchers have tried to analyze the Golden Gate Bridge’s tendency to draw people who want to end their lives, sometimes after they’ve taken flights from other parts of the country to do so.. Another associated the jump with entering “golden doors” to a new spiritual realm. e828bfe731 Zombies For Mac
